The difference is in the degree of projecture. High relief is formed from nature, as when a figure stands completely out from the ground, being attached to it in only a few places. Low relief is when the figure projects but little, as in medals, festoons, foliages, and other ornaments. Demi relief is when one half of the figure rises from the plane. Brande.

RE-LIG′ION, (re-lij′un,) n.† [Fr. and Sp. religion; It. religione; L. religio, from religo, to bind anew; re and ligo, to bind. This word seems originally to have signified an oath or vow to the gods, or the obligation of such an oath or vow, which was held very sacred by the Romans.]

1. Religion, in a comprehensive sense, includes a belief in the being and perfections of God, in the revelation of his will to man, in man's obligation to obey his commands, in a state of reward and punishment, and in man's accountableness to God; and also true godliness or piety of life, with the practice of all moral duties. It therefore comprehends theology as a system of doctrines or principles, as well as practical piety; for the practice of moral duties without a belief in a divine lawgiver, and without reference to his will or commands, is not religion.

2. Religion, as distinct from theology, is godliness or real piety in practice, consisting in the performance of all known duties to God and our fellow-men, in obedience to divine command, or from love to God and his law. James i.

Religion will attend you — as a pleasant and useful companion in every proper place and every temperate occupation of life. Buckminster.

3. Religion, as distinct from virtue or morality, consists in the performance of the duties we owe directly to God, from a principle of obedience to his will. Hence we often speak of religion and virtue as different branches of one system, or the duties of the first and second tables of the law.

Let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion. Washington.

4. Any system of faith and worship. In this sense, religion comprehends the belief and worship of pagans and Mohammedans, as well as of Christians; any religion consisting in the belief of a superior power or powers governing the world, and in the worship of such power or powers. Thus we speak of the religion of the Turks, of the Hindoos, of the Indians, &c., as well as of the Christian religion. We speak of false religion, as well as of true religion.

A man may relinquish an enterprise for a time, or with a design never to resume it. They are non-conductors of electricity, and when excited by friction, their electricity is negative. They are heavier than water, and they melt by heat. They combine with the alkalies, performing the function of weak acids, and forming soaps. They are soluble in many of the acids, and convertible by some into other peculiar acids. They frequently exude from trees in combination with essential oils, and in a liquid or semi-liquid state. Note. — This word and avenge were formerly used as synonymous, and it is so used in the common version of the Scripture, and applied to the Supreme Being. "O Lord, revenge me of my persecutors." Jer. xv. In consequence of a distinction between avenge and revenge, which modern usage has introduced, the application of this word to the Supreme Being appears extremely harsh, irreverent, and offensive. Revenge is now used in an ill sense, for the infliction of pain maliciously or illegally; avenge for inflicting just punishment.

2. According to modern usage, to inflict pain deliberately and maliciously, contrary to the laws of justice and humanity, in return for injury, pain, or evil, received; to wreak vengeance spitefully on one who injures or offends. RE-WARD', v. t. [Norm. regarder, to allow; regardes, fees, allowances, perquisites, rewards; regardez, awarded. In these words there appears to be an alliance with regard. But in the Fr. and Norm. guerdon, a reward, and guerdonner, to reward, this alliance does not appear. So the Italian guiderdonare, to reward, is evidently a compound of the L. dono with another word, and apparently with the Sax. wither, G. wider and wieder, D. weder, answering to L. re, denoting return. The Spanish and Portuguese have the Latin word with a different prefix; Sp. galardon, a reward; galardonar, to reward; Port. galardam, galadoar. The Armoric has garredon, garredoner. Reward appears to be from the Norman.]

Thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil. — 1 Sam. xxiv.

Rewards and punishments presuppose moral agency, and something voluntarily done, well or ill; without which respect, though we may receive good, it is only a benefit, and not a reward.

(See READY.) Class Rd, No. 5, 9.]

1. To be carried on horseback, or on any beast, or in any vehicle. We ride on a horse, on a camel, in a coach, chariot, wagon, &c.

[In England, present usage confines the verb ride chiefly to motion on horseback, and when an excursion in a carriage or other vehicle is intended, the expression is ordinarily to take a drive. This distinction has sprung up within the last hundred years, and is not yet introduced into most English dictionaries. Nor is ride wholly confined to motion on a horse, since the English speak of riding in a stage-coach on a journey, &c. Still, to an English ear, the word ride, without qualification, naturally suggests but one idea — that of being borne on a horse. Whenever an excursion is spoken of, the expression is uniformly to ride or to take a drive, according to the nature of the conveyance. In all other cases, as of traveling, &c., whenever motion in a vehicle is intended, the qualifying clause is added, so that ride, standing by itself, always means motion on horseback. This usage, though gaining ground, does not yet prevail, to any great extent, in America. — Ed.]

2. Direct or upright; opposed to OBLIQUE; as, right ascension; a right sphere.

3. In morals and religion, just; equitable; accordant to the standard of truth and justice, or the will of God. That alone is right in the sight of God, which is consonant to his will or law; this being the only perfect standard of truth and justice. In social and political affairs, that is right which is consonant to the laws and customs of a country, provided these laws and customs are not repugnant to the laws of God. A man's intentions may be right, though his actions may be wrong in consequence of a defect in judgment.

4. Fit; suitable; proper; becoming. In things indifferent, or which are regulated by no positive law, that is right which is best suited to the character, occasion, or purpose, or which is fitted to produce some good effect. It is right for a rich man to dress himself and his family in expensive clothing, which it would not be right for a poor man to purchase. It is right for every man to choose his own time for eating or exercise.

Right is a relative term; what may be right for one end, may be wrong for another.

Your eyes are always in the right. Prior.

5. Just claim; legal title; ownership; the legal power of exclusive possession; enjoyment. In hereditary monarchies, a right to the throne vests in the heir on the decease of the king. A deed vests the right of possession in the purchaser of land. Right and possession are very different things. We often have occasion to demand and sue for rights not in possession.

SAB'BATH, n.† [Heb. שבת, to cease, to rest; as a noun, cessation, rest, L. sabbatum; Ar. سبت sabata.]

1. The day which God appointed to be observed as a day of rest from all secular labor or employments, and to be kept holy and consecrated to his service and worship. This was originally the seventh day of the week, the day on which God rested from the work of creation; and this day is still observed by the Jews and some Christians as the Sabbath. But the Christian church very early began, and still continue, to observe the first day of the week, in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ on that day, by which the work of redemption was completed. Hence it is often called the Lord's day. The heathen nations in the north of Europe dedicated this day to the sun, and hence their Christian descendants continue to call the day Sunday. But in the United States, Christians have to a great extent discarded the heathen name, and adopted the Jewish name Sabbath. Sabbath is not strictly synonymous with Sunday. Sunday is the mere name of the day; Sabbath is the name of the institution. Sunday is the Sabbath of Christians; Saturday is the Sabbath of the Jews.

From comparing this word and sack, a bag, in several languages, it appears that they are both from one root, and that the primary sense is, to strain, pull, draw; hence sack, a bag, is a tie, that which is tied or drawn together; and sack, to pillage, is to pull, to strip, that is, to take away by violence. See Class Sg, No. 5, 15, 16, 18, 30, 74, 77, &c.]

To plunder or pillage, as a town or city. Rome was twice taken and sacked in the reign of one pope. This word is never, I believe, applied to the robbing of persons, or pillaging of single houses, but to the pillaging of towns and cities; and as towns are usually or often sacked, when taken by assault, the word may sometimes include the sense of taking by storm.

1. Among ancient Christian writers, a mystery. [Not in use.]

2. An oath; a ceremony producing an obligation; but not used in this general sense.

3. In present usage, an outward and visible sign of inward and spiritual grace; or more particularly, a solemn religious ordinance enjoined by Christ, the head of the Christian church, to be observed by his followers, by which their special relation to him is created, or their obligations to him renewed and ratified. The Roman Catholic and Greek churches have long held to seven sacraments, viz., baptism, confirmation, the eucharist, penance, extreme unction, holy orders, and matrimony. The Protestants maintain that there are only two sacraments, viz., baptism and the Lord's supper. Thus baptism is called a sacrament, for by it persons are separated from the world, brought into Christ's visible church, and laid under particular obligations to obey his precepts. The eucharist, or communion of the Lord's supper, is also a sacrament, for by commemorating the death and dying love of Christ, Christians avow their special relation to him, and renew their obligations to be faithful to their divine Master. When we use sacrament without any qualifying word, we mean by it,

It. and Port. sacro; from L. sacer, sacred, holy, cursed, damnable; W. segyr, that keeps apart, from sêg, that is, without access; segru, to secrete, to separate. Animals offered in sacrifice are called victims; sacrifices in which no blood is shed, are called unbloody sacrifices. Sacrifices are expiatory, impetratory, and eucharistical; that is, atoning for sin, seeking favor, or expressing thanks. A sacrifice differs from an oblation, by being consumed partially or wholly on the altar; whereas, the oblation is only consecrated to God or to a religious use, as tithes, first fruits, or contributions for religious purposes. Sacrifices have been common to most nations, and have been offered to false gods, as well as by the Israelites to Jehovah.

The same verb in Arabic, ساخ sauga, signifies to sink, Goth. sigcan. The sense of the root is, to throw or thrust. Class Sg, No. 28. Pers. sachan a word, speech.]

1. To speak; to utter in words; as, he said nothing; he said many things; he says not a word. Say a good word for me.

It is observable that, although this word is radically synonymous with SPEAK and TELL, yet the uses or applications of these words are different. Thus we say, to speak an oration, to tell a story; but in these phrases, say can not be used. Yet to say a lesson is good English, though not very elegant. We never use the phrases, to say a sermon or discourse, to say an argument, to say a speech, to say testimony.

A very general use of say is to introduce a relation, narration, or recital, either of the speaker himself, or of something said or done, or to be done, by another. Thus Adam said, This is bone of my bone; Noah said, Blessed be the Lord God of Shem. If we say, We have no sin, we deceive ourselves. Say to the cities of Judah, Behold your God. I can not say what I should do in a similar case. Say thus precedes a sentence. But it is perhaps impracticable to reduce the peculiar and appropriate uses of say, speak, and tell to general rules. They can be learnt only by observation.

2. To declare. Gen. xxxvii.

3. To utter; to pronounce.

Say now Shibboleth. — Judges xii.

11. To repeat; to rehearse; to recite; as, to say a lesson.

12. To pronounce; to recite without singing. Then shall be said or sung as follows.

13. To report; as in the phrases, it is said, they say.

14. To answer; to utter by way of reply; to tell.

Say, Stella, feel you no content,
Reflecting on a life well spent? Swift.

Note. — This verb is not properly intransitive. In the phrase, "as when we say, Plato is no fool," the last clause is the object after the verb; that is, "we say what follows." If this verb is properly intransitive in any case, it is in the phrase, "that is to say," but in such cases, the subsequent clause is the object of the verb, being that which is said, uttered, or related.

SĒAL, (seel,) *n. [Sax. seol, sele, syle; Sw. säl.]

The common name for the aquatic carnivorous mammals of the family Phocidæ, corresponding to the genus Phoca of Linnæus. Seals mostly inhabit sea-coasts and islands, particularly in the higher latitudes of both hemispheres. They pass much of their time in the water, but have warm blood, and breathe only air. Their hind feet are placed at the extremity of the body, in the same direction with it, and serve the purpose of a caudal fin; the fore feet are also adapted for swimming, and furnished each with five claws. Some seals have external ears, while others are destitute of them; and this difference is the ground of M. Peron's distribution of them into two divisions, viz., the earless seals or true seals, and the eared seals or otaries. There are numerous species, bearing the popular names of the sea-lion, the sea-bear or ursine-seal, the sea-elephant, elephant-seal or bottle-nose, the bearded or great seal, the monk seal, the crested seal, &c. It is covered with short, stiff, thickset hair, has no external ears, and is usually from three to five or six feet in length. SEE'ING, ppr. [from see.] Perceiving by the eye; knowing; understanding; observing; beholding.

Note. — This participle appears to be used indefinitely, or without direct reference to a person or persons. "Wherefore come ye to me, seeing ye hate me?" Gen. xxvi. That is, since, or the fact being that or thus; because that. In this form of phraseology, that is understood or implied after seeing; why come ye to me, seeing that ye hate me? The resolution of the phrase or sentence is, ye hate me; that fact being seen or known by you, why come ye to me? or, why come ye to me, ye seeing (knowing) that fact which follows, viz., ye hate me. In this case, seeing retains its participial character, although its relation to the pronoun is somewhat obscured. Originally, seeing, in this use, had direct relation to the speaker or to some other person. "Now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son." Gen. xxii. Here seeing refers to I, or, according to the language of syntax, agrees or accords with I. I know thou fearest God, for I see thou hast not withheld thine only son; I know thou fearest God by seeing, in consequence of seeing this fact, thou hast not withheld thine only son. But the use of seeing is extended to cases in which it can not be referred to a specific person or persons, in which cases it expresses the notoriety or admission of a fact in general, and is left, like the French on, in the phrases on dit, on voit, without application to any particular person.

SEE'ING, n. The act of perceiving objects by the organ of sight, or the sense which we have of external objects by means of the eye. Hutton.

SEEK, v. t.; pret. and pp. SOUGHT, (sawt.) [Sax. secan, sæcan, to seek, to come to; asecan, to require; gesecan, to seek, to come to; forsacan, forsæcan, to forsake; G. suchen, to seek; absuchen, to pick off; besuchen, to visit, to see; gesuch, suit, petition; gesuche, a continued seeking; versuchen, to try, prove, tempt, essay, strive; versuch, trial, essay; D. zoeken, to seek, to look for, to try or endeavor; bezoeken, to visit, to try; gezoek, a seeking; opzoeken, to seek; verzoeken, to request, desire, invite, try, tempt, to visit; Dan. söger, to seek, to endeavor; besöger, to visit; forsöger, to try, to essay, to experiment, to tempt; opsöger, to seek or search after; Sw. söka, to seek, to sue, to court; söka en lagligen, to sue one at law; besöka, to visit; försöka, to try, to essay, to tempt. These words all accord with L. sequor, Ir. seichim, to follow; for to seek is to go after, and the primary sense is to advance, to press, to drive forward, as in the L. peto. (See ESSAY, from the same root, through the Italian and French.) Now, in Sax. forsucan, forsæcan, is to forsake; sacan is to strive, contend, whence English sake, and sæcan, secan, is to seek. But in Swedish, försaka, to forsake, to renounce, is from sak, thing, cause, suit, Sax. saca, English sake; in Danish, forsager, to renounce, is from siger, to say; sag, a thing, cause, matter, suit; sagd, a saying; G. versagen, to deny, to renounce, from sagen, to say, to tell; D. verzaaken, to deny, to forsake, to revoke, from zaak, thing, cause, and zeggen is to say or tell, which is the Sax. secgan, to say. These close affinities prove that seek, essay, say, and L. sequor, are all from one radix, coinciding with Ch. ספי, to seek, to strive. Class Sg, No. 46, and see No. 30, Ar. The English verb see seems to be from the same root.]

SEEM, v. i.† [G. ziemen, to become, to be fit or suitable; geziemen, to become, to beseem, to be meet, decent, seemly. In D. zweemen is to be like, to resemble, and taamen is to fit or suit, to become. In Dan. söm is a seam, and sömmer signifies to hem, and also to become, to beseem, to be suitable, decent, or seemly. This is certainly the G. ziemen; hence we see that seam and seem are radically the same word; It. sembrare, to seem; sembiante, like, similar, resembling; rassembrare, to resemble; Sp. semejar, to be like; Fr. sembler, to seem, to appear. These words seem to be of one family, having for their radical sense, to extend to, to meet, to unite, to come together, or to press together. If so, the Dutch taamen leads us to the oriental roots, Heb. Ch. and Syr. דמה, damah, to be like; Eth. ኣደመ adam, to please, to suit; Ar. ـــــ adama, to add, to unite, to agree, to suit, to conciliate, to confirm concord. Class Dm, No. 5 and 7. These verbs are radically one, and in these we find the primary sense of Adam; likeness, or form.]

2. In present usage, self is united to certain personal pronouns and pronominal adjectives, to express emphasis or distinction; also when the pronoun is used reciprocally. Except when added to pronouns used reciprocally, self serves to give emphasis to the pronoun, or to render the distinction expressed by it more emphatical. "I myself will decide," not only expresses my determination to decide, but the determination that no other shall decide.

Himself, herself, themselves, are used in the nominative case, as well as in the objective.

Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples.—John iv. See Matt. xxiii. 4.

SHALL, v. i. verb auxiliary. pret. SHOULD. [Sax. scealan, scylan, to be obliged. It coincides in signification nearly with ought, it is a duty, it is necessary; D. zal, zul; G. soll; Sw. skola, pret. skulle; Dan. skal, skulle, skulde. The German and Dutch have lost the palatal letter of the verb; but it appears in the derivative G. schuld, guilt, fault, culpability, debt; D. schuld, id.; Sw. skuld, Dan. skyld, debt, fault, guilt, skylder, to owe; Sax. scyld, debt, offense, L. scelus. The literal sense is, to hold or be held, hence to owe, and hence the sense of guilt, a being held, bound, or liable to justice and punishment. In the Teutonic dialects, schulden, skyld, are used in the Lord's Prayer, as "forgive us our debts," but neither debt nor trespass expresses the exact idea, which includes sin or crime, and liability to punishment. The word seems to be allied in origin to skill, L. calleo, to be able, to know. (See SKILL.) Shall is defective, having no infinitive, imperative, or participle. It ought to be written shal, as the original has one l only, and it has one only in shalt and should.]

1. Shall is primarily in the present tense, and in our mother tongue was followed by a verb in the infinitive, like other verbs. "Ic sceal fram the beon gefullod," I have need to be baptized of thee. Matt. iii. "Ic nu sceal singan sarcwidas," I must now sing mournful songs. Boethius.

We still use shall and should before another verb in the infinitive, without the sign to; but the signification of shall is considerably deflected from its primitive sense. It is now treated as a mere auxiliary to other verbs, serving to form some of the tenses. In the present tense, shall, before a verb in the infinitive, forms the future tense; but its force and effect are different with the different persons or personal pronouns. Thus, in the first person, shall simply foretells or declares what will take place; as, I or we shall ride to town on Monday. This declaration simply informs another of a fact that is to take place. The sense of shall here is changed from an expression of need or duty, to that of previous statement or information, grounded on intention or resolution. When uttered with emphasis, "I shall go," it expresses firm determination, but not a promise.

2. In the second and third persons, shall implies a promise, command, or determination. "You shall receive your wages," "he shall receive his wages," imply that you or he ought to receive them; but usage gives to these phrases the force of a promise in the person uttering them.

When shall is uttered with emphasis in such phrases, it expresses determination in the speaker, and implies an authority to enforce the act. "Do you refuse to go? Does he refuse to go? But you or he shall go."

3. Shall I go, shall he go, interrogatively, asks for permission or direction. But shall you go, asks for information of another's intention.

4. But after another verb, shall, in the third person, simply foretells. He says that he shall leave town to-morrow. So also in the second person; you say that you shall ride to-morrow.

5. After if, and some verbs which express condition or supposition, shall, in all the persons, simply foretells; as,

If { I shall say, or we shall say,
Thou shall say, ye or you shall say,
He shall say, they shall say.

6. Should, in the first person, implies a conditional event. "I should have written a letter yesterday, had I not been interrupted." Or it expresses obligation, and that in all the persons.

I should, } have paid the bill on demand; it
Thou shouldst, } was my duty, your duty, his duty
He should, } to pay the bill on demand, but it
You should, } was not paid.

7. Should, though properly the past tense of shall, is often used to express a contingent future event; as, if it should rain to-morrow; if you should go to London next week; if he should arrive within a month. In like manner after though, grant, admit, allow.

1. A token; something by which another thing is shown or represented; any visible thing, any motion, appearance, or event, which indicates the existence or approach of something else. These names are borrowed from the constellations of the zodiac of the same denomination, which were respectively comprehended within the foregoing equal divisions of the ecliptic, at the time when those divisions were first made; but, on account of the precession of the equinoxes, the positions of these constellations in the heavens no longer correspond with the divisions of the ecliptic of the same name, but are considerably in advance of them. Thus the constellation Aries is now in that part of the ecliptic called Taurus.

SIN, n.† [Sax. sin and syn; G. sünde; D. zonde; Sw. and Dan. synd; Lapponic, Finnish. sindia; allied perhaps to Ir. sainim, to alter, to vary, to sunder. The primary sense is, probably, to depart, to wander.]
1. The voluntary departure of a moral agent from a known rule of rectitude or duty, prescribed by God; any voluntary transgression of the divine law, or violation of a divine command; a wicked act; iniquity. Sin is either a positive act in which a known divine law is violated, or it is the voluntary neglect to obey a positive divine command, or a rule of duty clearly implied in such command. Sin comprehends not actions only, but neglect of known duty, all evil thoughts, purposes, words, and desires, whatever is contrary to God's commands or law. 1 John iii. Matt. xv. James iv.

Sinners neither enjoy the pleasures of sin, nor the peace of piety. Rob. Hall.

Among divines, sin is original or actual. Actual sin, above defined, is the act of a moral agent in violating a known rule of duty. Original sin, as generally understood, is native depravity of heart; that want of conformity of heart to the divine will, that corruption of nature or deterioration of the moral character of man, which is supposed to be the effect of Adam's apostasy, and which manifests itself in moral agents by positive acts of disobedience to the divine will, or by the voluntary neglect to comply with the express commands of God, which require that we should love God with all the heart, and soul, and strength, and mind, and our neighbor as ourselves. This native depravity, or alienation of affections from God and his law, is supposed to be what the apostle calls the carnal mind or mindedness, which is enmity against God, and is therefore denominated sin or sinfulness.

Unpardonable sin, or blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, is supposed to be a malicious and obstinate rejection of Christ and the gospel plan of salvation, or a contemptuous resistance made to the influences and convictions of the Holy Spirit. Matt. xii.
2. A sin-offering; an offering made to atone for sin.

He hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin. — 2 Cor. v.

3. A man enormously wicked. [Not in use.] Shak.

Sin differs from crime, not in nature, but in application. That which is a crime against society, is sin against God.

SIN, v. i. [Sax. singian, syngian.]
1. To depart voluntarily from the path of duty prescribed by God to man; to violate the divine law in any particular, by actual transgression, or by the neglect or non-observance of its injunctions; to violate any known rule of duty.

All have sinned and come short of the glory of God. — Rom. iii.

It is followed by against.

Against thee, thee only, have I sinned. — Ps. li.

2. To offend against right, against men or society; to trespass.

I am a man
More sinned against than sinning. Shak.
And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, sins against th' eternal cause. Pope.

SIN, for SINCE, [Scot. syne,] is obsolete or vulgar.

SIN'-BORN, a. Derived from sin.

SINCE, prep. or adv. [Sw. sedan; Dan. siden; D. sint; supposed to be contracted from Sax. siththan, which is from sithian, to pass, to go; and siththan may be the participle, and denote past, gone, and hence after, afterward. Sith, in Saxon, has a like sense. Our early writers used sith, sithen, sithence; the latter is evidently a corruption of siththan. It may be doubted whether Sw. sen, Dan. seen, slow, late, is a contraction of this word; more probably it is not.]
1. After; from the time that. The proper signification of since is after, and its appropriate sense includes the whole period between an event and the present time. I have not seen my brother since January.

The Lord hath blessed thee, since my coming. — Gen. xxx.
Holy prophets, who have been since the world began. — Luke i. John ix.

Since, then, denotes, during the whole time after an event; or at any particular time during that period.
2. Ago; past; before this. "About two years since, an event happened," that is, two years having passed.
3. Because that; this being the fact that.

Since truth and constancy are vain,
Since neither love nor sense of pain
Nor force of reason can persuade,
Then let example be obeyed. Glanville.

Since, when it precedes a noun, is called a preposition, but when it precedes a sentence, it is called an adverb. The truth is, the character of the word is the same in both cases. It is probably an obsolete participle, and according to the usual classification of words, may be properly ranked with the prepositions. In strictness, the last clause of the passage above cited is the case absolute. "The Lord hath blessed thee, since my coming," that is, my arrival being past. So, since the world began, is strictly, past the world began, the beginning of the world being past. In the first case, since, considered as a preposition, has coming, a noun, for its object, and in the latter case, the clause of a sentence. So we say, against your arrival, or against you come.

SKILL, n.† [Sax. scylan, to separate, to distinguish; Ice. and Sw. skilia, Dan. skiller, to divide, sever, part; whence shield, that which separates, and hence that which protects or defends; D. scheelen, to differ; schillen, to peel or pare. Scale is from the root of these words, as in shell, Sax. scyl, sceal. In Heb. סכל is, foolish, perverse, and as a verb, to pervert, to be foolish or perverse; in Ch. to understand or consider, to look, to regard, to cause to know, whence knowledge, knowing, wise, wisdom, understanding; Rab. to be ignorant or foolish; Syr. to be foolish, to wander in mind, also, to cause to understand, to know, to perceive, to discern, also, to err, to do wrong, to sin, to fail in duty; whence, foolish, folly, ignorance, error, sin, and understanding; Sam. to be wont or accustomed, to look or behold. The same verb with ש, Heb. שכל, signifies, to understand, to be wise, whence wisdom, understanding, also, to waste, to scatter, or destroy, to bereave, also, to prosper; Ch. to understand; שבלל to complete, to perfect; בלל with a prefix. This signifies, also, to found, to lay a foundation; Syr. to found, also, to finish, complete, adorn, from the same root; Ar. شَكَلَ shakala, to bind or tie, whence Eng. shackles; also, to be dark, obscure, intricate, difficult, to form, to make like, to be of a beautiful form, to know, to be ignorant, to agree, suit, or become. These verbs appear to be formed on the root בל, בול to hold, or restrain, which coincides in signification with the Ch. and Eth. בהל, to be able, L. calleo, that is, to strain, stretch, reach, and with כלל, to perfect, that is, to make sound, or to reach the utmost limit. The sense of folly, error, sin, perverseness, is from wandering, deviation, Gr. σκολιος; the sense of skill and understanding is from separation, discernment, or from taking, holding, or reaching to, for strength and knowledge are allied, and often from tension. The sense of ignorance and error is from wandering or deviation, or perhaps it proceeds from a negative sense given to the primary verb by the prefix, like ex in Latin and s in Italian. The Arabic sense of binding and shackles is from straining. The Eng. shall and should belong to this family.]

In all bodies there is an appetite of union and evitation of solution of continuity. Bacon.

2. A feeble combination, in which, with a mere mechanical change of properties, and without regard to definite proportions, one or more solids are equally diffused through some liquid. This mode of combination is so weak, that the liquid may be evaporated from the solid or solids, leaving them unchanged except in texture or aggregation. There is usually, and probably always, a limit to the quantity of the solid or solids which can be dissolved by a given liquid, and this is called saturation. The liquid in which the solution is effected is called the solvent or menstruum.

Note. — This word is not used, in chemistry or mineralogy, for the melting of bodies by the heat of fire.

The term solution is applied to a very extensive class of phenomena. When a solid disappears in a liquid, if the compound exhibits perfect transparency, we have an example of solution. The word is applied both to the act of combination and to the result of the process. Thus common salt disappears in water, that is, its solution takes place, and the liquid obtained is called a solution of salt in water. Solution is the result of attraction, or affinity, between the fluid and the solid. This affinity continues to operate to a certain point, where it is overbalanced by the cohesion of the solid; it then ceases, the fluid is said to be saturated, the point where the operation ceases is called saturation, and the fluid is called a saturated solution. Brande.

Solution is a true chemical union. Mixture is a mere mechanical union of bodies.

SOPH'O-MORE, n. One belonging to the second of the four classes in an American college.

[This word has generally been considered as an "American barbarism," but was probably introduced into our country, at a very early period, from the university of Cambridge, England. Among the cant terms at that university, as given in the Gradus ad Cantabrigiam, we find Soph-Mor as "the next distinctive appellation to Freshman." It is added, that "a writer in the Gentleman's Magazine thinks mor an abbreviation of the Greek μωρία, introduced at a time when the Encomium Moriæ, the Praise of Folly, by Erasmus, was so generally used." The ordinary derivation of the word, from σαφὸς and μωρὸς, would seem, therefore, to be incorrect. The younger Sophs at Cambridge appear, formerly, to have received the adjunct mor (μωρος) to their names, either as one which they courted for the reason mentioned above, or as one given them in sport, for the supposed exhibition of inflated feeling in entering on their new honors. The term, thus applied, seems to have passed, at a very early period, from Cambridge in England to Cambridge in America, as "the next distinctive appellation to Freshman," and thus to have been attached to the second of the four classes in our American colleges; while it has now almost ceased to be known, even as a cant word, at the parent institution in England, from whence it came. This derivation of the word is rendered more probable by the fact, that the early spelling was, to a great extent at least, Sophimore, as appears from the manuscripts of President Stiles, of Yale College, and the records of Harvard College down to the period of the American revolution. This would be perfectly natural if Soph or Sophister was considered as the basis of the word, but can hardly be explained if the ordinary derivation had then been regarded as the true one. — Ed.]

STAND, v. i.; pret. and pp. STOOD. [Sax. standan; Goth. standan. This verb, if from the root of G. stehen, D. staaen, Dan. staaer, Sw. stå, Sans. sta, L. sto, is a derivative from the noun, which is formed from the participle of the original verb. In this case, the noun should properly precede the verb. It may be here remarked, that if stan is the radical word, stand and L. sto can not be from the same stock. But stand in the pret. is stood, and sto forms steti. This induces a suspicion that stan is not the root of stand, but that n is casual. I am inclined, however, to believe these words to be from different roots. The Russ. stoyu, to stand, is the L. sto, but it signifies also to be, to exist, being the substantive verb. So in It. stare, Sp. and Port. estar.]
